PEW and CLASSICAL MEMENTO of HENRY CLAY an Original Bronze Medal, modeled from life, and executed by C. C. Wright, Esq. engraver of the New-York Gold Medal to CLAY, and of the Virginia and Congressional Gold Medals to Scort, Taylon &c.

The supreme eminence in which the character of HENRY CLAY is held in the bearts of his countremen, and in the veneration of the world, naturally creates—now that he is no more on earth—s general desire for such a memento of his person and his public services as shall be best adapted, at once, to the popular breadth of that regard, and the eaduring ments of the object.

Among the most refined nations, from the earliest periods of history to the present time, this two-fold purpose has been deemed the best attained by means of classic medals, bearing sculptured likenesses of the persons commemorated, together with appropriate symbols of their renown. More darable than the most colossal statuary or monuments of marble, because existing in greater numbers and better adapted for private preservation, these granhic mementors constitute the most precious less and elucidations of ancient history, and the only memorials, in fact, of many of its most illustrious characters and events. To execute such m-dals in the highest syle of art, has ever been deemed worthy of national emulation, while to preserve them though successive generations and epochs, has been counted an evidence of patriotice pride and honorable refinement.

The present new medal of HENRY CLAY, as a work of art, is at least equal to any work of the kind that could have been produced in any country, and probably in any age. The likeness of Mr. CLAY, on the obverse side, is from a recent model from life, and executed by an artist of unequaled eminence, whose qualifications for this particuly task have been metured by repeatedly performing it in other medals of the same illustrious person, designed for personal presentation; and the likeness is a cordingly promounced by all competent judges to be the most securate in every lineament, and the most characteristically expressive of any that has been made of Mr. CLAY, in any form. On the reverse, ide is an appropriate design, in bold relief, illustrative of the patriotic basis of his political character. The medal is three inches in diameter, in the finest bronze, and inclosed in a handsome morocco case.

No simular work of art has ever been submitted to the general patronage and patriotism of the American people, and none seems better calculated to gratify and reward it. It will be furnished to subscribers at $5 per copy, as soon as impressions can be obtained, at the office of publication, No. 61 Chambers at, New-York, where subscriptions will be received on and after Wednesday, the 7th inst.
